Fear

by Emily Derouin

Fear, for long I hated you Fear, you were my own personal hitman assigned to make me blue Fear, you filled oceans with the tears you brought me
The plane rides, school days, when you would not let me be Fear, everytime I began to fly, free of your weight
You latched on to me, your words full of hate But fear, I've come to a realization of my own fear, without you I would have flown too high, my limits unknown fear, you love me don't you? always by my side, telling me the dangers both real and lies fear, you are well intentioned that I now know Not all you say is true
But fear you mean well
And I'm beginning to love you too
